Basque Poet KIRMEN URIBE & Translator ELIZABETH MACKLIN

MEANWHILE TAKE MY HAND

"Uribe is a big fish in a small pond: the serious and energetic young poet stands among the leading contemporary writers in Basque (Euskara), the language spoken and written in Uribe's ethnically distinct region of Spain Uribe takes on topics local and universal, from sexual delight to drug addiction to the fate of minority languages."
—Publishers Weekly

"[Macklin] is deeply eccentric but central. She moves in a rarefied air as if splashing clouds were enough. The joy and intelligence in [her] poems is simply tremendous. We are standing in front of the new mirror of grace."
—Tomas Salamun, author of The Four Questions of Melancholy
